A BANGOR CASE

Among the Decisions at Law Just Made—Rescripts Received by Clerk of Courts Sweet.

Among the decisions at law received Thursday by Clerk of Courts C. F. Sweet was that of Agnes White vs. Oakes & Chandler, the folding-bed case; in which damages were claimed through injury received from the bed, and which has created considerable interest. The decision is in favor of Oakes & Chandler. The rescript is as follows:

Penobscot County
Agnes White vs. George H. Oakes, et al.

Rescript.

The defendants, being dealers in furniture and not manufacturers, sold a folding bed to the plaintiff without express warranty of any kind. The bed proved dangerous to the persons using it, not from defective parts, but from faulty design. It proved to be a trap, suited to crush its occupants by shutting up like a jack knife when slept upon. The weight of its occupants, if sufficient to overcome the gravity of the upright head-piece, would trip that forward and the bed collapse. This bed did so injuring the man sleeping in it so that he became partially paralyzed. The defendants had no knowledge of this danger. If, therefore, the plaintiff may recover in this case, it must be from an implied warranty against the dangers of its contrivance.

The mechanism of this bed could be observed by the purchaser as well as the vendor. Neither, unless skilled in mechanics, would be likely to discover the dangers of it, unaided by any object lesson The hinge, or flexible joint upon which the bed hung was a contrivance of folding iron straps that really brought the point of support much farther front at the head than they seem to, thereby overcoming the gravity of the head-piece and tending to pitch it forward. The bed, when sufficiently loaded, would bring the center of gravity of the upright head-piece outside its base, or so nearly so, especially when the castors were turned under, that any unusual disturbance might work that result.

In the sale of chattels by the manufacturer for specific uses an implied warranty arises that the article is fit for the use intended. In the sale of chattels, without express warranty and without fraud caveat emptor applies, and there is no applied warranty If the sale be by description, without opportunity for inspection, the description must be met.

The sale of this bed was with full opportunity of inspection. It was shown the purchaser, and the terms of the sale were put in writing. She therefore took no implied warranty, or an equivalent right, unless facts were concealed from her that made the transaction fraudulent. No concealment is shown It does not appear that the defendants knew of the dangerous contrivance that operated the bed. They deny such knowledge But it is said that, after the sale, the bed broke down, that the defendants were called upon to take it back and that they said they would fix it and warrant it all right. One of the iron straps had broken and the defendants put on a new one.

The defendants were neither bound to repair the bed nor take it back They gratuitously repaired it and any warranty they might have then made would have been without consideration and not binding. But the conversation testified to does not amount to a warranty of its safety in use. At most, it can only be considered an assurance that its mechanism had been made sound. It does not appear that they were then informed of any inherent danger in its use from faulty contrivance. Had they been aware of this, and concealed the danger and allowed the plaintiff to further use the bed when they knew of its dangerous character, other considerations would arise not material here There is no phase of the case as presented that can cast any liability upon the defendants.

If the plaintiff was allowed to amend by inserting a count for the purchase money paid, the amendment could do the plaintiff no good The bed was bargained on installment. The plaintiff says that, after the shocking disaster with the bed, the defendants demanded payments of money overdue, which being refused, they took the bed. The defendants deny the demand, but say that they retook the bed by plaintiff's consent. In either case under the terms of sale, they might do so. They have both part payment and the bed. That was their legal right, and a more generous course cannot be demanded by law.

Rescript.

The complaints charge defendants with having in their possession, at one time during the open season when deer may be lawfully killed, eighty-nine carcasses of deer, they not being marketmen or provision dealers within the terms of the statute The only question presented is whether the statute, R S c 30, sec. 12, as amended by the act of 1891, c. 95, sec 4, makes such possession an offense. It reads as follows.

"No person shall take, kill, destroy or have in possession between the first days of October and January more than one moose, two caribou and three deer, under a penalty of one hundred dollars for every moose, and forty dollars for every caribou or deer, or parts thereof, so taken, killed, destroyed or in possession in excess of said number Whoever has in possession, except alive more than the aforesaid number of moose, caribou or deer or parts thereof, shall be deemed to have killed or destroyed them in violation of law. But nothing in this section shall prevent any market man or provision dealer, having an established place of business in this State, from purchasing and having in possession at his said place of business, not exceeding one moose, two caribou and three deer lawfully caught, killed or destroyed, or any part thereof, at one time, and selling the same at retail in open season to his local customers."

The object of the statute is to prevent the decimation of game by limiting the time when it may be taken or killed to the months of October, November and December, in each year During these months, under certain restrictions unimportant here, deer, moose and caribou may be lawfully taken or killed, and the various provisions of the statute aim to compass this result. They do not intend to interfere with foreign game, dead or alive, brought within the State, at any time, or with game lawfully taken or killed here. While the enactment, by its letter, makes the possession of more than one moose, two caribou and three deer at any time an offense, the context of it must not be overlooked in determining the scope and meaning of the whole statute.

But one penalty for killing, having in possession and transporting could have been intended; and that applies to the illegal capture of the game. The other provisions were intended to aid in the enforcement of that one, by making the possession evidence of illegal capture, and compel the person charged to explain his possession of what would directly point to an illegal taking of the game. In other words, compel him to have or handle game illegally taken or killed, by any person, at his peril. Game illegally taken or killed subjects the possessor of it to the penalty for its illegal taking, just as if he had illegally taken it himself.

This interpretation best comports with the true intent and purpose of the statute, and works out a reasonable and just application of its provisions, at the same time obviating various difficulties in the way of a different construction of it.

We are aware of our own decision, in Allen v. Leighton, 87 Me. 206, but do not regard that as an authority upon the question here considered. This question was neither raised nor considered in that case.

Complaints quashed.
T. W. Vose for State.
Hutchings & Hutchings for respondents.

Aroostook County.
Frank Michaud, pro ami, vs. Canadian Pacific Railway Co.

Rescript.

Two lads, brothers, fifteen and seventeen years old respectively, were at the Caribou station of defendant road when the special freight of defendant arrived. They say that as they were entering the van to see if their mother and sister had come, the conductor came along, the train then having started, and told them to get off or he would kick them off, and the younger, having a cigar box under one arm, in attempting to get off, fell under the car wheels and had both legs crushed. For that injury $10,000 damages are claimed. The defendant says that they were not on the van until after it had started and heard the conductor tell them to get off, and in doing so the younger boy fell under the car wheels

In defense, the conductor testifies that the train stopped at the station four or five minutes, and that while he was in the saloon car to get his bills the train started, and as he went out the front car door he saw the boy fall on the track; that he neither spoke to him nor motioned or ordered him off; that he signaled the train to stop, and that it did stop in half a car's length.

Two other witnesses, engaged in the potato business, who were at the station, say that as the train started both boys ran to get on. The older got on and the younger, having a cigar box under his arm, grabbed the car rail with the other hand, lost his balance and fell under the car.

Another witness says that, as he came from his potato house across the track from the station, he saw the boy fall from the car then in motion; that just as he fell the conductor opened the car door and came out on the car platform. The engineer says the car did not go over twenty feet after he got the signal to stop.

Upon this evidence the jury returned a verdict for the defendant. There are no exceptions, or motion to set the verdict aside as against evidence, but a new trial is asked for evidence newly discovered since the trial. The motion was filed within a week after the verdict. It sets out that John Monroe of New Brunswick, if present, would testify, among other things not material, that he saw the conductor come out and heard him tell the boys to get off or he would kick them off. Monroe testifies that the conductor came out of the door and said something.

He can't just say the words he said, something about the boys getting off and made a motion with his hand. He thinks there were two or three boys, two sure. On cross examination he said that, after the accident, he called down to see the boy, saw him and his father and mother and explained just how it happened This evidence is not newly discovered since the trial.

The motion avers that one Ezekiel Scott, of Connor Plantation, would testify that just as the boys got upon the car platform the train started to back up quickly, and as the plaintiff boy was trying to open the car door the conductor came out and extended his hands towards the boys, saying something to them at the same time that he did not fully hear; that the boys started to get off and the smaller fell under the wheels, that he helped take him from under the car.

The witness substantially so testified and that about two months after the accident he went to the father's house to see the boy, saw him and the mother, told them that he helped lift him up, and he remembered it too, that he was there when the accident happened to him, and talked with his mother about it.

The witness lived ten miles away No diligence whatever is shown in not calling the witness at the trial, the man who was known to have helped the boy from under the car.

Another motion was filed at a subsequent term, stating that William E. Wright, of Perham, would testify that, as the boys were standing upon the car platform while the train was backing up, the conductor opened the door, stepped out upon the platform and extended his hands towards the boys and said "Get off," that the larger boy jumped off and the smaller started to get off and fell between the two cars and the wheels of the box car ran over his legs.

The witness substantially so testifies, but is so confused about the whole matter, that his testimony of newly discovered and otherwise competent evidence could not change the result.

Some other matters are contained in the motion; but not of sufficient importance to require notice from the Court. Some testimony is reported not responsive to the motion, and that need not be considered. On the whole, it must be said that no legal cause is shown for the ordering of a new trial, and, if ordered, it is extremely doubtful if any other result could ever be reached. Boys playing about moving cars must take the risk of life and limb if they will persist in such dangerous sport; and this case ought to be a salutary lesson to them and to their parents of the consequences of playing with danger.

Motion overruled.

Arthur W. Burdin vs. Walter Ordway
Rescript.

Assumpsit for rent No express promise is shown, and the law does not imply one from the facts in the case. The defendant was tenant of the plaintiff's father. He died, and the tenant denies the title of the plaintiff, who claims to hold as heir. As to him, the tenant has become a disseisor There was no relation of landlord and tenant between them from which the law implies assumpsit for rent, or use and occupation Rogers vs Libby, 35 Me. 200; Howe vs Russell, 41 Me. 446 Emery vs Emery, 87 Me 281. Title to land should not be tried in assumpsit. Plaintiff nonsuit.

Washington County
Charles H Corthell et al. vs. Eben A Holmes.

Rescript

The defendant justifies all the acts charged in the declaration as done in the abatement of a nuisance that obstructed a way through and over which he had the right of passage.

Any obstruction placed within the limits of a public way is a nuisance by common law as well as by statute. The easement of the public is co-extensive with the exterior limits of the way and the question of nuisance does not depend upon the interruption of travel.

If the nuisance be an obstruction of travel, then the traveller's rights are interfered with and he may remove it. This the defendant avers that he did do, with care and without damage more than necessary to secure a passage for himself and his team, agents and servants over the same. All this is admitted by the demurrer and it is a good defense.

Exceptions overruled.

Don't Like Confinement.

The "Weary Willies" and bums in general do not seem to seek a lodge in the Bangor jail this winter and during the past two weeks there have been but eight commitments. As is well known Sheriff Brown keeps the jail very neat and the prisoners get good food, but he insists on the most orderly discipline, as is right, and keeps the prisoners to their cells most of the time. Even the old timers who have got themselves into jail when that frequent tired feeling came on, as well as the youngsters, don't like this very much and when they get out either go somewhere else or stay away from jail as long as possible. Winter is the time when the "Willies" seek the soft jail snaps but they don't seem to flock into Bangor which has no use for them.

A Handsome Jewel.

Mr George S. Hall has been presented by friends of Bangor Lodge of Odd Fellows, to which he belongs, with a very handsome Odd Fellows' veteran lodge jewel, to obtain which it is necessary to have been an Odd Fellow 25 years. Mr. Hall was initiated into the order in 1867 and consequently has been an Odd Fellow more than that time. The jewels are obtained through the Sovereign Grand Lodge.

The jewel is of gold and enamel, was made in Cincinnati and is of fine workmanship. The bar is composed of 3 links. The back of the pendant contains the inscription "Past Grand George S. Hall from friends of Bangor Lodge, January 2nd, 1896." The date is that of Mr. Hall's fiftieth birthday. The front is of enamel and contains a white star with a blue center containing the figures "25," upon a maltese cross of scarlet. The colors are those of the three Odd Fellow degrees. The jewel is highly prized by Mr. Hall.

Bangor Weekly Courier

The Bangor WEEKLY COURIER is issued to-day with its usual very large amount of reading matter. Among its contents are telegrams of the United Press; editorials on the leading questions of the day; Bangor and Brewer locals; stock, market and marine reports; letters from correspondents, agricultural news, etc., etc., etc. Copies in wrappers for mailing may be obtained at this office.

AMUSEMENTS.

Rice's "1492."

Rice's "1492" will be given at the Opera House to-night and Saturday night and Saturday afternoon. Its many pleasantries have driven care from thousands of hearts and instilled a long lasting cheerfulness Both the minds and eyes of auditors are simultaneously interested and pleased, the former by the bright dialogues, jokes, etc., and the latter with the dazzling scenic effects and rich costumes, while charming and catchy music engages the ear. Nothing has been left undone to strengthen and improve upon the former presentation in this city, it is said, and many additions and revisions have been made to accomplish this result As it will be seen here this evening, it might well be called a new "1492" The cast is said to be a strong one in every respect, including foremost among its members, Mr. Mark Smith, Miss Carrie Behr, Miss Maud Courtenay, Mr Will H. Sloan, Mr. Raymond Stephens, Miss Marie Hilton, Mr, John Keefe, Mr Edward Readway and others known by repute

"Tornado"

At the Opera House next Tuesday night the Tornado will "blow," as the posters say The author has produced his windy idea with very elaborate scenic investure and the didos which his counterfeit wind storm cuts up are calculated to keep the audience guessing, as houses, trees, fences, barns and in fact everything that belongs to a country homestead go soaring away in a mad aerial dance as though possessed Scarcely less surprising is the completeness with which a full rigged ocean liner is set upon the stage in the second act, smokestacks, masts, decks, cabins, sails, all are there. A collision at sea, an open sea scene, in which a ship is seen bearing down upon the survivors, and sending the powerful rays of an electric light across the waters of Chicago harbor and North pier at night, and the interior of the dissecting room of a medical college are among the scenes

Central Club Lecture

The full title of Prof. Morse's lecture before the Central Club next Monday evening is as follows 'The Art of Illustration, being an explanation of the processes of wood and steel engraving, lithography, and the recent advances in photo relief engraving'

The Baltimore American says of him "Prof. Morse, with his remarkable skill in drawing, the display of which continually receives applause, unites in an unusual degree all the qualities of a lecturer of the highest order"

The Portland Press says "Prof Morse not only talks himself but gives his crayon and blackboard voices that are more potent than the language of ordinary lecturers He has a wonderful faculty of putting his lessons in form before the eye and frequently gives his sketches such an irresistible humor that his audience laugh in spite of themselves, while they learn the most useful lessons."

Coming Enjoyable Concert

Those who enjoyed hearing Mr Victor Herbert play on the cello last Thanksgiving, will be interested in reading what the Boston Transcript has to say concerning the soloist on the same instrument who will play at the Adamowski Quartet concert next week at City Hall:

"Mr Josef Adamowski, younger brother of the violinist, made his first public appearance on this occasion, and made a particularly fine impression, both in his solo pieces and in the quartets His tone is pure, warm and sympathetic, his intonation impeccable, his phrasing elegance itself His technique, both in bowing and finger-work, seems highly developed Indeed his playing bears a strong resemblance to his brother's He evinces the same fine musical sensibility—that union of sympathetic warmth of feeling with grace of expression—and a corresponding artistic instinct for expressive, poetic element in his playing to overstep the bounds of musical coherence.'

Oriental Lodge Entertainment

An entertainment will be given under the auspices of Oriental Lodge, No 60, I. O. O F, at City Hall, on Wednesday evening January 29 h, by W A Coles, of Albany, N Y, the blind humorist, impersonator and ventriloquist, who gives an evening of laughter The entertainment will be followed by dancing The Daily News of Ballston Spa, N Y, says'

'W A Coles gave a pleasing and interesting entertainment in Odd Fellows' hall last evening. Mr Coles proved himself a thorough master of the art of elocution, and his recitations were loudly applauded His droll stories and jokes kept the audience in an uproar Mr Coles is a good ventriloquist, having perfect control of the muscles of the face and throat. His talking figures were very amusing The hall was filled and should he ever come again Odd Fellows' hall will not hold the crowd

The Natural Science Association.

The regular meeting of the N S A. will take place this evening at 7 30 in the Common Council Room, City Hall The programme for the session will be as follows Paper on "Butterflies of Maine" by Arthur B Kenney, member of the zoology class, B H S.

The treasurer of the society, Mr Gilbert Fletcher, will read a paper on "Rabbits and Hares."

The meetings of the association are growing in interest and influential members are added at each meeting

Through the efforts of our Representative, Hon, C. A Boutelle, the association has recently received from the Department of Agriculture in Washington, a fine collection of valuable books and reports, relating to Natural Science. The gift is very much appreciated by the members All are cordially invited to the meetings.

A NOVELIST'S BLUNDER

Forgot He Had Killed Off a Character and Had to Resuscitate Him.

A great master of the art of throwing off stories by daily installments was Ponson du Terrail When he was at the height of his vogue, he kept three running at the same time in different papers. His fertile imagination was never at a loss, but his memory frequently was. He was apt to forget today what he did with a hero or heroine yesterday. To help his memory he at first noted down briefly in copy books what happened to his men and women, but finding that often he could not read his own writing, he invented a new system. He procured little leaden figures on which he gummed the names of his characters as they were born. Supposing there were three stories running, there were three sets of figures in different drawers When a character was settled off, the little man or woman in lead was taken away from its companions and laid aside.

One day when Ponson du Terrail was all behind in his work, he set himself to his task without examining the slain. His bad memory led him into a terrible blunder. He had forgotten that he had killed Rocambole—the still famous Rocambole—in the previous feuilleton, and, to the

A DEADWOOD STORY.

IT IS TOLD BY DAN COSTELLO, THE OLD TIME CIRCUS CLOWN

The Hero of This Tale Was California Joe, a Picturesque Character—How the Minister's Death Was Avenged—An Indian Head In the Belle o' Union

There was a little gray haired old man sitting in the corridor of the Tift House the other day who seemed to be taking a lively interest in what was going on around him. Nobody spoke to him and he sat alone and unnoticed, for he was a complete stranger in the city He was from Dakota, and it had been nearly a quarter of a century since he had made his home in the east Years ago he had been a man of wealth and had owned interests in Dakota, mines worth many thousands of dollars, but he now had very little of that fortune left and his name was no longer known among the business men of the state where he had lived He was Dan Costello, the once famous clown who for several years was in partnership with P T Barnum in the show business.

Costello was in Deadwood in the old pioneer days, when the town was filled with lawless characters, cowboys Indian fighters and desperadoes It was just after he had left Barnum Wild Bill and a score of other characters whose names have since been prominent in 10 cent blood and thunder literature were there, and Costello knew them all Sometimes he played poker with them in the Belle o' Union, the old gambling place where they gathered together at night and where several of them were killed Going down to the Belle o' Union to see somebody get shot was quite a favorite pastime with Deadwood citizens in those days

One of these lawless men whom Costello knew was California Joe and it was about this man that the ex-clown told an Express reporter an interesting story, which although it happened 15 years ago, has never crept into print Here it is

'Well' as Costello told it "it doesn't make much difference how we mortals die and it didn't matter much to California Joe except that he always said he would rather like to quit the world with his boots on And he did To begin with there's an Indian's head with some of the skin and hair still clinging to it in the Smithsonian Institute in Washington I don't suppose any of the people at the institute know how that Indian came to be killed but it happened in a peculiar way In Deadwood, when I was there there was a minister hanging about the town and holding street services for the miners What was his name or to what denomination he belonged I never knew and I don't suppose there were many who did but that doesn't matter so far as this story is concerned One day this minister started out on horseback to ride over to Butte mountain The road he took led around through the hills and then across the plains It was a very dangerous one, for there were many good places for the Indians who were thick in the neighborhood, to lay their traps and more than a few of the whites had been waylaid and killed on it Butte mountain overlooked the plains and the Indians could see for miles from its summit and watch for travelers The minister rode slowly through the hills, with his gun hanging across his saddle and his Bible bulging out from his coat pocket and he did not see so much as a sign of an Indian. It was not until he reached the plains and was spurring his horse over the long straight stretch of road that lay before him that he heard a warwhoop and suddenly half a dozen Indians rode out from their hiding place The minister had fighting blood in his veins and he began to shoot right away He got a bullet in each leg and then succeeded in killing one of the Indians But the Indians got the best of him and his body was found riddled with bullets

'It happened that California Joe and his partner were on their way from Crook City to Deadwood that day and it was their misfortune to meet the same band of Indians on the road across the plains California Joe's partner was killed almost as soon as the firing began and at the same time one of the Indians fell Joe stood his ground and fired shot after shot in quick succession Two more of the Indians were killed and then the rest taking fright from Joe's good marksmanship hurried away Joe then hunted over one of the Indians lying in the road The Indian was dying and Joe finished the work by cutting off his head Then he mounted his horse took the head with him and rode full speed for the town He rode in through the streets as fast as his horse could go holding the Indian's head, the blood from which had spattered his saddle by the hair The lights were just being lighted in the Belle o' Union and everybody left the gambling tables to hear Joe's story

'That Indian's head was hung on the wall in Belle o' Union and it was there for a year or more Then somebody threw it out on a garbage pile It lay there all one summer After the Deadwood fire somebody who took an interest in such relics found it lying out in the yard and in some way or other it got to the Smithsonian institute

'As I said before California Joe died with his boots on It was only a little while after his adventure near Deadwood that he had a falling out with a man near Red Cloud agency Joe called him a liar or something of that sort, and the fellow took offense He hung around trying to get the drop on Joe for a week and finally he landed him Joe was coming down the street when the fellow sent a bullet into his back He is buried out in a lonely spot on the plains not far from there Some of his old friends stopped playing poker long enough to go to his funeral and they chipped together and put a little picket fence around the grave to keep the coyotes away and put up a headstone on which were simply the words California Joe "

The minister in Costello's story was mentioned in the article on Deadwood in The Illustrated Express He was the Rev Henry W Smith the first missionary to the Black Hills —Buffalo Express

Chrysanthemum Culture

I think it advisable to keep chrysanthemums in pots during the entire season because when this is done the labor and risk of lifting and potting in the fall are avoided writes Eben E. Rexford in The Ladies Home Journal The plants should be shifted from time to time during the season, if grown in pots, until you have them in 8 or 10 inch pots Give rich soil and plenty of water Pinch off the ends of the branches to make the plants compact Do this at intervals until the latter part of July or middle of August

Betrothals In Holland

In certain parts of Holland when a young man thinks he loves a girl, he asks her for a match to light his cigar at the door of the beloved one's home This is done to let the parents know that something is intended, and if the visit is repeated and the same thing occurs no doubt is left in the minds of the girl's parents, and they immediately proceed to investigate the young man's character and antecedents. When he calls a third time, they are prepared to give him an answer If his suit is looked upon favorably, he is given a match If refused, he produces his own match, lights his cigar and walks away If a favorable answer is given, he steps forward and joins hands with the girl. While the engagement is by no means a settled fact even at this important stage, it is stated as a truth that if, on the occasion of the young man's third visit, his inamorata offers him a second cigar and he smokes it in the house the engagement is never canceled —Godey's Magazine
